

Job Description Checklist

Eliminate Barriers & Promote Value Proposition in Postings to Attract Applicants

Higher ed's competitive set for talent is larger and more diverse than ever before, increasingly including out-of-sector companies. Institutions must use clear and compelling job descriptions to convince prospective applicants to apply for and choose higher ed jobs over those in other industries.

Instructions: Use this checklist to assess your institution's current job descriptions and identify opportunities to increase the number of qualified applicants by increasing accessibility, adjusting requirements to welcome a broader array of qualified candidates, and articulating the value proposition of the workplace.

1. How hard is it for potential applicants to find and read our job descriptions?

- Shorten job descriptions to ~650 words or less.
- Use bullets, rather than paragraphs, to outline requirements, qualifications, and benefits.
- Link to your career website on your institution's homepage.
- Test job descriptions and career websites on a mobile device. Make job descriptions and applications mobile-friendly as needed.

2. Do our job descriptions create unnecessary barriers for potential applicants?

- Assess whether job requirements and qualifications are redundant and/or critical for success in the role (e.g., master's degree). Remove or rewrite these as preferences rather than requirements.
- Identify industry-specific competencies (e.g., experience providing student services) and replace with transferable skills (e.g., customer service). See Appendix A for examples of transferable skills.
- Include phrases like "or related experiences/skills/degrees" to expand and diversify applicant pool.
- Assess job descriptions for unconscious bias across gender (e.g., using "he" or "she" instead of "they"), age (e.g., "digital native"), and ability (e.g., "must lift 20 lbs" instead of "moves equipment up to 20 lbs").

3. Do potential applicants understand the value and benefit of working at our institution?

- Explain why a candidate should apply to your institution versus another university or employer.
- Include information about tangible benefits (e.g., health care, vacation days, retirement options).
- Articulate distinct, non-tangible perks of working at your institution (e.g., working with a collaborative team, career advancement opportunities).
- Reduce information about rankings, university research, or student educational experiences unless explicitly linked to employee duties or values (e.g., faculty research).
- Use first- and second-person language to help candidates visualize working at the institution.
- Provide social proof, including top employer awards and employee testimonials, where applicable.

Appendix A: Transferable Skills Compendium

Instructions: Use the Transferable Skills Compendium to replace industry-specific skillsets (e.g., experience communicating with faculty) for broader competencies (e.g., storytelling) in job descriptions. Transferable skills can increase and diversify your candidate pool by attracting applicants that are qualified for a role but come from outside of the hiring unit or the higher ed industry.
